Police Push Probe Into Polish Attack

Police continued sifting through fingerprints yesterday in an effort to solve the assault on a Polish diplomat's wife which has State Department, Central Intelligence Agency and FBI investigators watching unofficially.

Zofia Czajer, 33, wife of Antoni Czajer, second secretary of the Polish Embassy, told police three men questioned her, choked her unconscious and ransacked her apartment at 1700 Harvard st. nw. while her husband was out Nov. 29. They took nothing. At least two spoke a foreign language.

Identification Bureau experts found prints in the apartment, some presumably left by the men during their hour-and-a-half intrusion. Now the prints of the Czajer family and everyone else who had legitimate access to the apartment must be gathered for the process of elimination.

It was the second incident at the residence within three weeks.

On Nov. 20, someone entered the apartment of Yury N. Batovrin, 45, a Russian embassy attache, and stole his clothes and wallet containing $500 while he showered. The clothes were recovered in a hallway.

Batovrin couldn't remember whether he had locked his door. Mrs. Czajer said her door was locked but not chained. Police are trying to figure out the method of entrance in both cases.
